The background of the image is an abstract artwork. It features several horizontal bands of color, including shades of light green, pale yellow, and off-white. Interspersed among these bands are several prominent, horizontal streaks of a vibrant, slightly textured red color. The overall effect is one of layered, organic movement, reminiscent of a microscopic view of a material or a cross-section of a natural formation.

Interior Voyages

Essay by Helaine Posner

SUSAN SCHWALB: Interior Voyages

Over the past ten years, Susan Schwalb has employed a spare, minimal vocabulary of horizontal lines and bands, drawn across layered fields of color, to create several remarkably resonant and nuanced series of paintings and drawings. In contrast to the cool geometry of conventional Minimalism, the artist's work, based on process and the handmade, evoking nature and natural phenomena, repetition and time, perception and individual experience, suggests a feminist approach to modernism. Though essentially abstract in form, Schwalb's work, small-scaled and intimate, refers to the real world.

The artist claims to "find the work" through the process and materials of its making. She begins by applying three or four layers of acrylic wash to a gessoed wood panel to produce a smooth surface which she breaks by sanding in lines, marks, or incisions, revealing various colors beneath. At various moments she introduces silverpoint, a medium the artist has used for over thirty years but has recently employed in new and unconventional ways. Instead of using a metal stylus to draw a fine, figurative line, in the tradition of such precursors as Albrecht Dürer and Leonardo da Vinci, Schwalb rubs thin pieces of metal across her paintings leaving softly-toned, horizontal bands of silver, or in some cases gold, copper, or bronze, on their surface. The finished work, at once layered and luminous, alludes to the earth's strata, as the title of an earlier series attests, while appearing to shimmer before our eyes.

Elusive things, such as remembered color and the quality of light, suffuse the artist's paintings and capture a sense of the places she has lived and worked. In Music of Silence IX (2008), Schwalb conveys the cool, grey light of winter in the northeast through silvery tones marked by subtle traces of red. Pale expanses of green and blue repeatedly traversed by horizontal lines may recall moonlight reflected on the ocean near the New England shore in the triptych Incident in the Mist #6 (2007). The sun and heat of the southwest seems to animate the painting 5:05 PM (2008) in which a saturated magenta field is injected with vibrating reds and yellow ochre at the horizon to describe a tremulous twilight. In these works and others, the artist recalls aspects of the natural world in simple, poetic, often sensual terms.

Like the best abstract painting, Schwalb's work transcends technique and materials and aspires to the sublime. It is easy to lose oneself in her contemplative, quietly expressive work, and emerge richer for the experience.
